actions

- Firstly, by creating an international scientific committee with representatives from several European countries, with national, European, and above recognized title, qualifications and fame.
- Creating a network where scientific research and training between European universities can be carried out through a continuous, varied and diverse exchange between the academic authorities and the students' body, for the creation of universally recognized and concretely shared academic pathways.
- Create an ERASMUS open to multiple universities at the same time, favoring and accompanying, along with cultural research, the path (or pathway) it has developed over time in different human experiences. Here the value of the exchange would be profound, true and due to the difficulty of searching together.
